You Can't Go Wrong With
JACKSON ROSES

Jackson's own-root Roses are grown in pots in cool, well-ventilated greenhouses, and may be set out in the garden any time except in the coldest weather. They make amazingly rapid growth when transplanted to the open ground and should grow and bloom one hundred per cent. Jackson's field-grown budded Roses are two-year-old, vigorous stock from the open ground. Plants are dormant and will be shipped with bare roots. These make a much quicker and more vigorous first year's growth because of their large size and fine development.
